How Jim Sweeny Got Even With a Man Who Had Mortally

A Woman, as Usual, in the Case Which is Comparatively Unknown in Montana.

Wounded Him.

A Sensational Bedside Scene in Which Man Fails to Kill His Man But Wounds Him.

"It seems to me," said an old timer last night, "that eastern correspondents have the idea that they will make Montana history attractive by quoting or stealing from Professor Dimsdale's 'Vigilantes.' Now, Dimsdale is good authority but he has left out many things that make 'interestin' readin'. I will tell you a story and will for Helena and are now receiving the con leave out the right names; or rather the right name, as but one of the men is alive and he is a poor broken down cripple. Twenty-one years ago to-day, Oct. 25, 1889, Jim Sweeny was shot and mortally wounded by John Connors.

"The names I give are, of course, fictition, but many of the old-timers will re member the incidents. Sweeny was a hightoned gambler and had a fine-looking woman whom he passed off as his wife. The woman caught the fancy of Connors and he woman caught the fancy of Connors and he never rested until he got acquainted with her. The result was that the names of Mrs. Sweeny and Connors became unpleasantly mixed together. Sweeny had been warned by friends that Connors was playing him false, but paid no attention, thinking he was too solid with the woman. Finally he was induced to play a trick on his quondam wife which cost him his life and made a physical wreck out of Connors. Fort Benton was a good town in those days and when Sweeny told his woman that he had a sure thing on winning $20,000 from a freighter she bade him a hypocritical but tearful good-bye. Sweeny said afterwards that if the woman hadn't cried he would not have suspected him a hypocritical but tearful good-bye. Sweeny said afterwards that if the woman hadn't cried he would not have suspected her, but the tears did the work. He went out of town about ten miles, spent the day and came back, getting in at midnight. He went to his room and located his man by peeping over the transom. The next morning he waited in the corridor with a gun expecting to get a snap shot at Connors as he came out of the room, but Connors got on by some unaccountable means and opening the door cautiously poked out his gun and fired striking Sweeney square between the shoulders the ball passing out through the right breast. Sweeny fell in the hall with his gun in his hand and it exploded making a big hole in the floor.

"With the natural inconsistency of women of her class Mrs. Sweeny rushed out, picked up Sweeny in her arms, took him in the room, placed him upon the bed and summoned a physician, who pronounced the wound mortal. Strange to say no one in the house heard the shot and the knowledge that Sweeny had been mortally wounded by Connors was only known to a few.

"Sweeny lingered along for a week and seemed to be getting better. Sunday morning it was—I remember the day—he told he woman he was going to die and wanted to make friends with Connors before he passed in his checks. Connors was sent for and came. He sat down by the dy-wanted to make friends with Connors before he passed in his checks. Connors was sent for and came. He sat down by the dying man, who clasped his hand with his right and told him he forgave him for what he had done. He asked him to be a friend to the woman who had brought on the trouble and gained his consent to adopt a ten-year-old daughter of his who was in the Sacred Heart convent, St. Louis, Mo. While both men were crying Sweeny, who had been lying upon his back, with a superhuman effort, suddenly turned over upon his left side, threw his right hand over his head, thrust it under his pillow and quick as a flash drew a bull-dog revolver and fired point blank at Connors, It was Sweeny's intention to shoot the man through the heart, but he was so weak that his hand fell and the ball passed through Connors' right leg just was so weak that his hand fell and the ban passed through Connors' right leg just above the knee, shattering the bone. Sweeny then attempted to shoot the woman, but didn't have strength enough to cock the pistol, and with it firmly clenched in his hand he turned over on his back and expired.

"Connors was placed in the same bed in which Sweeny had expired, and was nursed back to life by the same woman who had been unfaithful to the man who had supported her, giving her everything she needed. Connors recovered, but was made a cripple for life, He married the woman, and they are now living on a ranch about forty miles from here and are well-to-do in this world's goods. He kept his promise in regard to the little girl, and kept her at the convent until she was finely educated. She married a Chicago merchant, and last week I met them at the Hotel Broadwater with three pretty children. In a conversation with the man he told me that his wife's father formerly lived in Helena, but his wife did not know whether he was living or dead. I could whether he was living or dead. I could have told him the story, but thought it better not to do so. Connors did not know of his adopted daughter's presence. Now, there is a tragedy for you that has all the elements of sensationalism, but is true in every particular." every particular."

Bean says he saw a bear and others saw wolves. When asked why he didn't try to bag old bruin, Bean said he hadn't lost any bear, as he was all alone and in a bad place to extricate himself should the bear see fit to chase him.
